WHY YOU SHOULD RECYCLE YOUR RECHARGEABLE PRODUCTS?

In the past decade we have all become accustomed to the power and convenience of hand-held, rechargeable power tools and appliances, such as cordless phones, and the popular Black & Decker Cordless Screwdriver and Dustbuster® Cordless Vacuum.

Most of these tools and appliances are powered by nickel-cadmium batteries, popularly known as Ni-Cads. Unlike the familiar alkaline batteries that may last only a few hours before being replaced, Ni-Cads can be recharged over and over again. In addition, Ni-Cads need not contribute to our country's growing waste-disposal problem - as alkaline batteries do - because they can be recycled. They should not be disposed, incinerated, composted or landfilled. Though Ni-Cads last far longer than alkaline batteries - usually between 5 to 7 years - they eventually will no longer hold a charge. When that happens, many consumers simply throw away the battery or the tool itself. That is both wasteful and harmful to the environment. When you throw away a Ni-Cad battery - or any battery for that matter - it contributes to the waste-disposal problem. To help avoid this, Black & Decker has begun a comprehensive, nationwide program of Ni-Cad battery recycling. We're pitching in to keep rechargeable Ni-Cad batteries out of the waste stream.

Here's how you can help. When your Black & Decker cordless tool or appliance no longer holds a charge, take or send the product, with a note asking Black & Decker to recycle the product, to your local Black & Decker service center. We will then see to the proper disposal of the batteries and the product. Or, if you wish, follow the battery removal instructions on page 5 of this instruction manual and contact your local municipality for proper battery disposal instructions.

If you have any further questions about Black & Decker's Ni-Cad battery recycling program or need to locate the Black & Decker Service Center nearest you, call our toll-free Consumer Assistance and Information number at 800-231-9786.
